PAT LYNCH

The nay-sayers are never going to stop the world's march towards strengthening global networks. The fuel of globalisation is primarily in the realm of human capital: innovation, skill, positive relationships, leadership, intellectual 'fire-power', diplomacy, spirituality and hard work.

In schools and other places where people work and interact, a culture which emphasizes continuous improvement and shuns a culture of blame is one where the fuel of globalisation is being well used to make substantial progress.

Successful organisations normally dislike change; people with great jobs dislike change; yet excellent leaders seek out dependable innovative systems and ways of doing things in order to ride the escalator of improvement.

Long term success will only come if we drive out the fear of change by encouraging people to continuously engage with and embrace it, however small the individual changes, so the process becomes second nature and effortless.

Much of the aversion to change is linked to the fact that competence is often the enemy of change – competent people facing a new winning strategy are often afraid lest it make them seem to be less competent. This is a real irony.

Historically, substantial change used to occur only when there was a crisis or an emergency. Not any more. Globalisation has seen to that. Creating an attitude where incremental, continuous change is recognized as a prudent way of living, is the winning formula in 2005, whether this is in school settings or elsewhere.

Boldness is facing this new era is fundamental to success.

We trust you had a restful vacation and wish you well for Term II.

Delegation of Authority to the Principal to Act on Behalf of the Board of Trustees

It would be prudent for each school Board of Trustees to renew annually the mandate given to the principal, to act on its behalf on matters relating to employment, competency and student discipline. It appears that the Employment Court is coming to the view that because membership of Boards of Trustees tends to be fluid in many schools, unless a Board reviews its delegations regularly, a number of Trustees may not be aware of the delegations given to the principal. This has the potential to cause difficulties in a legal situation, hence the suggestion of annual renewal of the delegation.

Public Records Bill Implications for Schools

A draft school records schedule has been developed covering six general categories: student records, governance, personnel, finance, property and administration, historical. They have been designed for easy transition of records once the new Bill has been passed into law. Because schools already have filing systems and processes in place substantial changes to recordkeeping will not be needed; the new focus will simply be on the adequacy of storage and proving that the records exist, or have been disposed of as required.  Further information is available from the NZSTA help desk (0800STAhelp) of the Ministry of Education (philippa.pidd@minedu.govt.nz).

New Zealand Coaching Strategy Launched

The Minister of Sport and Recreation, Trevor Mallard, recently launched this strategy, which will increase the quality and the amount of time coaches have to focus on coaching. Also, the CoachCorp initiative piloted in Auckland has now been extended into Wellington. It involves companies giving their employees periods of paid time off work to coach, manage or officiate school or club sport.

Evaluation Indicators for School Reviews

Readers are reminded that the Education Review Office published the Evaluation Indicators for School Reviews in May 2003. ERO is always open to suggestions on improving the indicators. The document is available at www.ero.govt.nz, or paper copies can be obtained from the Education Review Office, PO Box 2799, Wellington.

The Key to Eliminating Bullying

Research from the University of South Australia indicates that the main factor perpetuating bullying in schools is fellow students turning a blind eye to bullying. Therefore the establishment of a culture of 'dobbing in' bullies is essential. 🔥

What Works in Education?

A recent OECD report identified the following crucial elements of excellent teaching:

- Teacher commitment to students
- Teacher love of children and young people
- Teacher mastery of the subject matter they teach
- Teacher ability to have a tool box of techniques to challenge their charges
- Teacher/school capacity to reflect on and evaluate what is happening in the learning process. 🔥

Teachers Make a Difference

'Our current best estimates are that up to 60% of the variability of children's achievement can be attributed to good teaching. So if you want to improve literacy rates you need to help teachers recognise their potential to make an even greater difference,' according to Professor McNaughton, leader of Auckland University's Woolf Fisher Research Centre. 🔥

Successful Entrepreneurship Linked to ADHD – Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Research quoted by Deb Gilbertson of Te Kaihau (www.windeaters.co.nz) suggests that 50% of entrepreneurs are in the ADHD spectrum, and the percentage rises in high growth companies. Educators might wish to ponder this. The website also has an interesting article on Feral Learning. 🔥

Literacy Coaching

Subject teachers have a growing awareness that they need to know more strategies to teach reading in their content area. Qualified literacy coaches or reading specialists can play a major role in developing an overall literacy programme for the school, helping teachers to improve instruction in listening skills, note-taking methods, and even strategies for public speaking and small group learning. 🔥
